

A method and system are disclosed for a flexible data-driven target object model which allows a client to gather and present information about objects on a target system independently of the target's operating system and processor architecture. The object descriptions are implemented using XML in order to provide architecture-generic descriptions of objects. The architecture-generic descriptions define the object data to be returned from the target and also defines its presentation to the user.

SJ01 15135 v 5

5